The people of Lille are inveterate smokers, and to decide the championship of the town a smoking contest was held. Each competitor was provided with a pipe, fifty grams (about an ounce and three-quarters) of tobacco, and a pot of beer. The one who smoked the tobacco first was to be the winner.

"A week or so afterward she came into the store and declared that she didn't like the flour and insisted on having it taken back and the brand she wanted sent in-stead. How the Horse Has Served the Human Family for Ages.

Some of the Uses to Which He War Put by the Ancients-Sacred to the Gods.

From the St. James Gazetta While the cult of the cow originated in the valleys of the "five rivers" of northwest India, the cult of the horse took its rise in Scythia and on the plains of Tartary, probably the true home of the horse, for the wild steeds of the steppes of central Asia-especially the equus Prejevalskii of Thibet-bear striking resemblance to the two Palaeolithic horses rudely though vigorously drawn upon a piece of reindeer horn by some artist of the stone age. This famous primitive etching was found at La Madeleine, in the department of Dordogne, and no doubt gives a correct idea of the wild horse, from whom early man in Europe drew his chief food supply. The herds of horses must have been great, indeed, for at one village alone, at Solutre, near Macon, was found a deposit of horse bones ten feet in depth, and more than three hundred feet in length, comprising, it has been estimated, the remains of from twenty to forty thousand animals. There is no doubt that for a very long period man saw in the horse nothing more than a pientiful supply of wild food-stuff. His next step was to half tame him, so that large herds, valued first for their flesh, and afterward for their milk, might be driven like sheep hefore the benderer.

before the herdsmen. Later on he was used for draught purposes, especially for the drawing of war chariots, and to this was long confined. There is no mention of the art of riding in the Veda. In ancient Egypt the ass alone was ridden, and even among the Homeric contests. Still, however, there have been Greeks the horse seems to have been used almost entirely as a car drawer. Prior to his domestication, the horse would seem to have gone out of fashion as a food, for in the neolithic age his remains are absent or very rare, while he reappears in the late ounces of tobacco first, without drinking or leaving the stage, should have a prize of twelve shillings.

"Many tryed," says Hearne, "and 'twas thought that a journeyman taylour of St. Peter's-in-the-East would have been the victor, he smoking faster than and help. nowadays for a child's pony. As a matter of fact, bits of the size wide enough for the primitive horse are only suitable now for donkeys. The most ancient horseshoes which have been discovered, and which be-long to the late iron age, perhaps about the eleventh century before Christ, are also very small. From these facts (says the Read), from examination of the bones, and from the pictures left for us by prenistoric artists, the primitive horse has been re-constructed. He stood about thirteen hands high-not much taller than a donkey. The head was larger than that of the horse of that the nations who first tamed the horse for riding attached high honor to the creature seated on whose back they scoured with such swiftness. The horsemen of Thessaly appeared to the other through a mist of fable as Centaurs, half man, half brute, but wholly divine. And in the frank fashion of all primitive people the horseman gave back to the horse the glory that he reflected from it, and made of his comrade in war and chase a kind of deity. The ancient Germans took oracles from white horses, just as the Egyptians did from their sacred oxen. animals were kept in groves and gave au-gury by neighing. Among the Slavs the sword combined with the horse to foretell future events. The weapons were planted in the ground and the horses led among them. By the movements of the beasts the attending priests judged the will of the cigars to ashes in the two hours, while his gods. Among the Norsemen the sacrifice of a horse and the eating of its flesh was a token of sacramental allegiance to Odin. Among the ancient Irish, when a king was crowned in Ulster, it was customary to slay a white mare and boil it in a vat. Into this vat the newly made king descended, and there sat, drinking the broth and tast-ing small portions of the meat. The eating of horseflesh was so well recognized as a heathen rite that the early Christian saints forbade it to their converts.

Among the Scythians the horse was deem-ed sacred to the sun, and its worship crossed the Himalayas, and was early established among the Raiput kings. Next to a hu-man being, who probably was, as a matter of fact, never sacrificed in ancient India, of fact, hever sacrificed in ancient india, the horse was the most acceptable offering to the gods. It is laid down in the Puranas that the sacrificer of a hundred horses ousis Indra, the king of the gods, from his throne and reigns in paradise (Swarga) in his stead. There is no record, however, of any one having earned this surpassing felicity. Kings on attaining the throne usually sacrificed a horse, their tributary princes performing the more menial duties connected with the Assumedhas decreases. remarked one member of a group seated connected with the Aswamedha (horse sac rifice). Indeed, even the office of porter in this solemn rite could only be assumed by one of royal blood. One of the books of the great Hindu epic, the Mahabharata, con-tains an account of the Aswamedha held by Yudhisthira, King of the Pandus, when he had, by the defeat of the Kauravas, firmly established his rule over northern India. The sacred horse was turned loose to wander wherever it listed for a year, while the royal army followed it everybrand of flour. We happened to be out of where at a respectful distance. Other tribes, whose pastures it crossed, were given the option of either turning out in the brand, but I told her we could send accepting wager of battle. At the end of the year the horse was led back to the pal-ace and there sacrificed.
